Romania 1989, after the fall of the communist regime many families lost their houses. In the meantime almost nothing improved. Many people of Bucharest living at the periphery manage to survive by selling recycled metals.

Cocalari presents a strange world of half-way measures, a half life where there is shelter, but no warmth; possession but no plenty; a neighborhood in Bucharest where none was meant to be.

INTRODUCTION by KEN GRANT photographer and Course Leader in Documentary Photography, at University of Wales, Newport, UK.

TEXT by ANTHONY BANNON, director of George Eastman House, the International Museum of Photography and Film in Rochester, New York.
